Coleman to speak here

Marshall Coleman, state's attorney general and a prime candidate for the Republican gubernatorial nomination next year, will speak at the Appomattox Lions Club meeting Thursday night.

Coleman is scheduled to arrive in Lynchburg at 6:30 p.m. and arrive in town around 7 p.m. The meeting will be held in the ACHS cafeteria.

The Lions meeting Thursday night is the annual spring Ladies' Night. Coleman will speak after dinner.

Coleman, born in Staunton, Va., holds undergraduate and law degrees from the University of Virginia.

He served in the U.S. Marine Corps from 1966 to 1969, including 13 months in Vietnam.

He has served on the board of directors of the Staunton-Augusta Chamber of Commerce, and was named by the Jaycees as one of Virginia's five outstanding young men in 1975.

He served as a member of the Virginia House of Delegates from 1972 to 1975, and as a member of the Virginia Senate from 1975 to 1977.

He was elected Attorney General in 1977.

Among Coleman's activities since assuming duties as attorney general have been work on speeding licensing procedures for the North Anna nuclear power plant following the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's licensing moratorium, establishing guidelines for punishing nuclear power plant saboteurs, and altering school discipline regulations to afford teachers more levity in dealing with student discipline problems.

Coleman has also worked on refining methods of prosecuting government misconduct.

He has also championed the cause of states asserting their rights in the face of the federal government.

MRS. CHARLES T. MOSES talks with John V. Jackson, of the State Division of Litter Control, following Monday's strategy session for the county anti-litter campaign. Representatives of church, government and civic organizations pledged their support for the campaign.

County residents plan campaign

By BILL SHERROD

Citizens in Appomattox took steps Monday night toward coming to grips with a problem which some officials estimate costs the state as much as $25 million annually.

That problem -- litter -- was the focal point of a planning session at the Memorial United Methodist Church involving community leaders from government, church, school and civic organizations.

John V. Jackson, deputy commissioner of the Virginia Division of Litter control, outlined the "Virginia Plan," a method of dealing with the litter problem, which was adopted for use here in a county-wide anti-litter campaign.

Committees were formed to manage each phase of the anti-litter plan, which will encompass the towns of Appomattox, Pamplin, and all unincorporated areas of Appomattox County.

Four phases of the plan -- planning and organization, communications, education, and cleanup -- will be put into effect now. The fifth phase, law enforcement, has been put in a temporary holding pattern. As Jackson noted, law enforcement is a "bandaid treatment" for a community's litter problems, and is generally used as a last resort. Law enforcement would involve establishing ordinances specifying punitive measures for litter-law violators in the county.

Jackson noted that the sources most people consider responsible for litter -- pedestrians and motorists -- account for only about 50 percent of the total litter problem. He cited household and business put-outs, construction sites, loading and unloading sites at businesses and industries, and uncovered trucks as the sources responsible for the other half of the litter problem.

"One of the most important goals is to convince people that (eliminating the litter problem) is important," Jackson said. "And make no mistake about it, almost everybody is involved in littering at one time or another."

Jackson noted that the litter control act was passed by the General Assembly in 1976, but the board of the Division of Litter Control has been in operation only about two years.

"It's not a vast bureacracy," Jackson added. "There are only five people in the whole division."

But, he added, anti-litter programs initiated in other communities in Virginia are apparently working.

In Bedford City, he said, an anti-litter campaign was initiated in 1978. "The first year, there was literally a mountain of trash after the clean-up effort," Jackson noted. "But the second year, when they covered a large area on cleanup and had more people working on it, they could have fit what they collected in two pickup trucks...apparently people were starting to think in terms of dealing with the problem, litterers, not the sympton, litter."

Jackson stressed that it is important to make any anti-litter campaign "a continuing effort."

"It will take time; you may not be able to halt the litter problem in Appomattox County in a year," he said.

Franklin Vaughan, representing the county Board of Supervisors and elected spokesman for the management and planning committee, suggested that proclamations be prepared by the county and the two towns citing the importance of the anti-litter campaign.

He noted that facts regarding the expense of cleaning up litter should be presented to the local governing bodies, as well. Other suggestions coming out of his committee included establishing a site for placement of litter, encouraging businesses to participate in the campaign, and establishing an awards and recognition program for the end of the campaign.

Bill Britton, representing the town of Appomattox and the county and elected spokesman for the communications committee, suggested that the campaign be personalized, and that the mass media be used to aid in executing the effort.

Britton also suggested establishment of a speaker program for the local organizations, as well as establishment of a poster contest for children.

Shirley Eye, a school teacher elected chairman of the education committee, outlined a short-term and long-term plan for disseminating information to school children, as well as ways to get the students in Appomattox involved in the actual cleanup.

Bill Caldwell, head of the cleanup committee, outlined ways to divide the county and towns into sectors which can be assigned to groups willing to work on picking up existing litter.

The period chosen for the campaign is May 18 through May 25.

The chairman of the various committes will meet before then to coordinate their efforts in organizing and executing the campaign.

Further details will be published in upcoming issues of the Times-Virginian.

Bloodmobile visits April 8

The Red Cross' Bloodmobile will be in Appomattox on Tuesday, April 8, from noon until 6 p.m. It will set up at Liberty Baptist Church.

The quota for Appomattox County for this visit will be 100 units of blood.

Make plans now to come out and donate a unit of your 'life saving blood'.

Students named to state school

Two Appomattox High School students are among 421 students in Virginia selected to attend the 1980 Governor's School for the Gifted, it was announced last week.

Philip Darrell Jacobs and John Frederick Jimison received word last week from the State Department of Education of the honor.

Philip, son of Mr. William H. Jacobs of Route 2, Appomattox, is a junior following a college preparatory program of studies.

His extra-curricular activities include the National Honor Society; the Science Club; the 4-H Teen Leader Club, the Latin Club, for which he serves as Parliamentarian; the Yearbook Staff, for which he is business manager; and the Drama Club, for which he serves as lighting technician.

Because of Philip's interest in engineering and electronics he was a participant this year in a program sponsored by the American Institute of Industrial Engineers, Inc., in which he was able to "shadow" an engineer at Meridith-Burda, Inc.

He has been recognized and commended for award-winning research projects at the local science fair and the regional science fair.

He has applied for the Air Force Academy's summer scientific seminar in Colorado this summer, and Philip's schedule will include a math course at C.V.C.C. next year.

He will be attending the Governor's School for the gifted at Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg.

John Frederick Jimison, son of Mr. and Mrs. Don F. Jimison of Route 3, Appomattox, is completing his junior year at ACHS.

In addition to strenuous college preparatory program of studies, John is very involved with the yearbook staff, of which he has been a member since the ninth grade. Last year he served as business manager for the yearbook and presently is co-editor of the Traveler.

John is also a member of the National Honor Society, the Science Club and the Latin Club, for which he serves as reporter. His hobbies include playing the organ and piano.

He will be attending the Governor's School for the Gifted at Mary Baldwin College, in Staunton.

The students were selected from 638 candidates across the state nominated by school superintendents and principals of private institutions. Selections were made by a 19-member committee appointed by the State Board of Education.

The committee included several former Governor's School participants, a parent, teachers, school administrators, and Department of Education personnel.

We have no Ayatollah on Martha Street to give us advise and counsel as to switching the light green, amber or red, but intuition tells me that some lawn-mowing had to be done this week.

An early Easter this year caught me unprepared. Same for Spring Cleaning. Brought in my first tulip Saturday, a nice Red Emperor. And three hyacinths. Will try to set up a game plan for lawnmowing so as to sashshay among the flowers accentuating the positive and discouraging wild onions and such. Best way I ever found to get ahed of unwanted honeysuckle was to pour gasoline on it. But not this year. Saturday I used a pruning knife. Ah yes, I have no forsythia this year, but all over town I see its glory. The famous cherry trees in Washington did not bloom for the annual Cherry Blossom Festival but they had the parades and princesses anyway. Spring marches on.

The tenth annual Civil War Bus Tour from Petersburg to Appomattox is scheduled for April 12. There will be two chartered buses, following the line of Lee's Retreat. There will be a stop at Saylor's Creek near Farmville, lunch at John Mosby Inn at Appomattox and a visit to the National Park Service facilities at Old Appomattox Court House. This is but another example of the importance of the National Park Service facility here. Many years ago, it was planned to construct a huge monument at Appomattox, the site of the Terminaiton of The War Between the States, 1861-1865." However, objections caused the project to be abandoned and eventually we got the present set-up.

Thanks to my friend, Mrs. Annie Laurie Sears for lending me two valuable books . . . "Across the Years" by Virginius Dabney, and "Below the James Lies Dixie" by Parke Rouse Jr. The first is an autobiography by a fellow editor. Was pleased on page 353 to find mention of a college classmate of mine, the late Jud Evans, star writer for the Richmond newspapers and the New York Herald-Tribune. The second book is a treatise on Southside Virginia.

Kentucky Derby time approaches and always I marvel at the names given race horses. Among those mentioned this year are Plugged Nickle and Naked Sky. I never saw Man o' War race but I saw this great winner at pasture up in Jersey.

Hope you filled out and returned your Census questionaire on time. Was not so bad, even the long form. Could have asked lots of tougher questions such as: who is boss in your house, does your dog have fleas, do you save trade stamps, can you carry a tune, your favorite sport, how many Christmas cards did you send, did you write your congressman last year? The Census is very important. Results will not be announced for some months yet, but hope the figures will prove that "Appomattox Is A Growing Town."

New telephone directories are out. I always check on whose name is first alphabetically and who is last. This time is is "Aaagaard to Zopp." Once again you can call The Times-Virginian at 352-8215.

In fun: A mother told her little girl not to ask so many questions. "Don't you know that curiosity killed the cat?" The little girl replied, "What did the cat want to know?"
